BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, May 4.

Writs were ordered to be issued for members to serve in Parliament for the county and town of Cambridgeshire, the latter by General Adeane, who has forfeited his seat by the acceptance of the office of one of the Clerks of the Bedchamber.

PUBLIC PAPERS.

Lord Newburgh gave notice, that he would, on Monday next, move for certain papers relative to finance, but declined doing so this day, as he had intimated, on account of the business before the House.

POOR LAWS.

Sir William Young made a familiar apology for not moving the third reading of the bill for the regulation of the act now in force, respecting the poor laws, but gave notice, that, on Wednesday next, he would make a motion to that effect.

PRECEDENTS.

The Marquis of Graham reported from the Committee appointed to search for precedents apposite to the steps necessary to be taken on the petition of Mr Hastings, that they had found no precedent immediately in point, but referred the House to the case of Baron de Mordaunt, where they conceived that the House, in respect to words, would find something analogous and worthy their observation.

The report was ordered to be laid on the table.

Mr Sumner moved, that the order of the day, for the further consideration of the petition of Warren Hastings, should be read.

The order of the day being read,

PETITION OF MR HASTINGS.

Mr Sumner next moved, that Mr Gurney, shorthand writer, should be examined, for the purpose of proving the allegations contained in the petition of Mr Hastings.

Mr Francis asked, Whether the shorthand writer was to be examined to the entire of the allegations, or to some particular point? He thought that he should be examined as to the whole of the speech; and that it should be translated, to see whether the tenor of the speech was consistent with the facts laid on the particular words, singled out as to have been spoken by Mr Burke.

Mr Addington thought it was unnecessary to take a retrospect of the entire business. The charge was made against that part of the speech which related to the murder of Nundocomar. He did not see that the House was to take cognizance of any other part of the speech. He would therefore move an amendment. That after the word "examine," should be inserted "for the purpose of ascertaining so much of the allegation in the petition as respected the affair of Nundocomar."

Mr Sheridan thought the amendment extremely partial. It went to proscribe Mr Burke from the be-neficiis which might accrue from confining the general features of his speech, and it wished to confine to a point, the principle of which could not be known without the whole of the speech were to be consulted. He did not think it fair or honourable to pin his Honourable Friend down to a specific charge. He did not think it just to garble the petition in favour of the culprit against one of the managers; and whether the House acted through tenderness or justice, still it should keep up appearances; and for his part he would, consistent with his idea, give his negative to the amendment.

Major Scott declared he had no communication whatever with the shorthand writers. Mr Burke had made many charges for which there was no foundation. He would not for the present enter into what he had said of Devi Sing and the three Pals; but as to his charge of Nundocomar, it dwelt on the mind of Mr Hastings, and to that particularly it was necessary to direct the attention of the House.

Mr Fox did not think the grounds on which the Hon. Member argued, supportable. The prisoner had stated a matter exceedingly injurious to his friend. Where, he asked, could he obtain satisfaction? Not before a Court of Justice. Not before the High Court of Parliament. Not from the decision of the House of Lords. The Commons of Great Britain, of whom he was a representative, he appealed to. He only asked them to go into a complete investigation of his conduct, and that ought not to be denied.

Mr Pitt differed from the Right Hon. Gentleman; it could not, he said, have any effect on the Hon. Gentleman, (Mr Burke) to have the petition proceeded on consistent with the amendment. Those Gentlemen who had boasted that they were clothed in the robes of magistracy, could not be injured by any allegation made by the person whom they were prosecuting, particularly if these allegations were not deemed worthy the consideration of the House. He thought the prisoner should have complained before, that is, as to several of his allegations. He charged the managers with acting contrary to their former declarations; for that in requesting that the whole of the allegations might be discussed, they created that delay which they had taken so much pains to impute to the conduct of the other side of the House.

Mr Fox briefly replied; he said that delay could not be imputed to the managers; they had said originally that the petition ought not to have been received. He then entered into an able reply to the arguments used by Mr Pitt, and with his usual ability controverted the assertions and arguments of his adversary.

Mr Wyndham took a retrospect of the business. He entered into the question at large, and declared that it was evident from what had dropped from others of the managers, of which not the least notice had been taken, that his honourable friend, Mr Burke, was singled out by the prisoner, as being the most formidable of his accusers, and having a better knowledge of his guilt, which must bring him to justice.

Mr Pitt denied that Mr Burke had been singled out; for the charge alluded to was not made by Mr Burke, it originated with another of the managers, (Mr Sheridan) and therefore this assertion could not have weight with the House.

The House divided.

For the amendment, — 113
Against it, — 69

After some desultory conversation, the short-hand writer was examined.

It is impossible for us to enter into an exact detail of the arguments made use of on each side, during the examination of Mr Gurney. After being many times ordered to withdraw, he was suffered at last to give his testimony, with the assistance of his shorthand notes, respecting the words spoken, which proved that Mr Burke had said, "That he (meaning Mr Hastings) murdered him (meaning Nundocomar) thru the hands of Sir Elijah Impey."

After Mr Gurney had withdrawn,

The Marquis of Graham rose. He wished not to dwell long on the subject; he would only speak to the authority vested in the hands of the managers by the House; it certainly did not amount to charging Mr Hastings with the murder of Nundocomar. He would therefore move, "That no direction or authority was given by this House to bring as a charge against Mr Hastings, or to impute to him the condemnation and execution of Nundocomar."

Mr Sheridan requested to know if this resolution was to be followed by any other?

Lord Graham replied, by none, that he knew of.

Mr Fox had not much objection to the motion, and therefore would not protract the debate by taking the sense of the House upon it. He did not conceive the resolution implied any censure on the conduct of his honourable friend.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed much satisfaction at the ready acquiescence of the Right Hon. Gentleman who spoke last. It was a full conviction that the motion carried evident propriety with it; it was a necessary atonement the House owed for the injury done to Mr Hastings, by charging him with murder; at the same time, he begged to be understood as not meaning to throw any censure on the Right Hon. Manager.

Mr Fox wished to inform the Right Hon. Gentleman, that he acquiesced because the motion conveyed no censure upon his friend. He acquiesced further, because it did not restrain him from mentioning the transaction in future. He begged the House to observe, that Mr Hastings was murdered; that not even an Honourable Baronet last year, when he impeached Sir Elijah Impey, accused him of murder, in the technical sense of the word—it was only in a moral sense. It could not be brought against either of them as a heavy crime, but as a misdemeanor. Nundocomar was taken off in a foul manner—they were the cause, not the effect.

That the Hon. Gentleman opposite to him (Mr Pitt) was satisfied with his acquiescence, he was pleased; he was more pleased, because the motion conveyed no censure. At the same time, he thought it would be disgraceful to the character of a learned Gentleman, who had said, that all Europe looked with eager eyes on this trial, if he neglected to move for the removal of the present managers. He might, or he might not say, what was agreeable to the Hon. Gentleman who spoke last; but he conceived himself at liberty to mention again the same words Mr Burke had made use of. He wished the House, if they were dissatisfied with their conduct, to remove them. The Managers did not wish to continue in their office without the confidence of the House. Perhaps the Hon. Gentleman might find persons on his side the House fit for such offices. The Managers were men of different characters. He had relied much on the generosity and honour of the House; he had thought that political professions and prejudices would have been waved on this subject; he had been deceived; he had found a desire to find fault with their proceedings, to listen to complaints against them. The House must be sensible that they must act according to their judgments; that it was not, he had been informed, illegal to introduce a larger crime towards proving a smaller; for in the trial of a man for defrauding an insurance office, the prosecutors had alleged and proved the commission of murder against the prisoner.

Mr Sheridan could not, even at this late hour, help troubling the House with a few observations. He wished the House to look over the charges; nay, to proceed a shorter way, he dared the Hon. Gentleman opposite (Mr Pitt) to rise and say, that if Nundocomar had not brought the charges for bribery and corruption against Mr Hastings, he would have died in the manner in which he did.—When he had said, last year, words to the same effect as Mr Burke's, no notice was taken of them; nay, in the answer delivered in by Mr Hastings, he had considered that allegation as a charge; for he says, "With respect to the malicious charge of murder, I solemnly declare I had no hand whatsoever in the condemnation and execution of Nundocomar."—He concluded by saying, that should it fall to his lot in a subsequent part of the trial to mention that transaction, he should use words to the same effect as Mr Burke had done.

Mr Wyndham said a few words in support of the Managers.

Mr Pitt disregarded insinuations thrown out against him; he and his friends should be watchful over the conduct of the Managers, and take care they transgressed not the directions of the Commons.

Mr Fox with much warmth contended, that no tyrant ever behaved in a more barbarous manner over those whom he governed, nor with more duplicity and treachery. He would maintain that the privileges of the Commons were never more invaded nor endangered within this century, nay he would say, within the last, than they had been within these few days.

The Marquis of Graham was led to say more than he wished; he had hoped the motion would have met with no opposition. The case he thought was now materially altered: he therefore should move that the subsequent words do follow the original motion, that the words spoken by Mr Burke, "he (meaning Mr Hastings) murdered him (meaning Nundocomar) by the hands of Sir Elijah Impey," ought not to have been spoken.

Colonel Phipps seconded it. He thought the conduct of the Managers unjust and absurd.

The amendment and the original motion were now read.

Mr Fox wished to know if the Hon. Gentleman who spoke last meant to take the sense of the House—if he did, and the House thought the conduct of the Managers unjust and absurd, why not remove them? It was a reflection on the House, to continue in those offices men who were disqualified by injustice and absurdity. He moved that the following do follow the former amendment.

Notwithstanding, on a former year, no notice was taken of the words spoken by another Manager to the same effect; and that Mr Hastings, in his defence, had considered them as a charge, answering in the following manner:—"With respect to the murder of Nundocomar," I solemnly deny having any concern in it "whatsoever."

Mr Fox reproached the conduct of the Gentlemen who had let their faces against the Managers. He said, that the House had voted for the impeachment; they had appointed the Managers to conduct it; but, from the motion of the noble Marquis, it seemed that they had appointed them merely for the purpose of abusing them. The noble Marquis had wished to censure the Managers; but, as he had done so in a courtly style, he thought the censure was admissible; for his part, he saw plainly that it was the intention of the Marquis, as well as his friends, to stir the prosecution—in plain words, they had acted meanly in wishing to convey sentiments which they were afraid to utter.

Colonel Phipps rose to order; he said the Right Hon. Gentleman had uttered words which were not only indecent, but such as were unfit for such an assembly, and would not be tolerated in any other place.

Mr M. A. Taylor replied, that the Hon. Gentleman who spoke last, was guilty of a breach of order in the first instance, in calling his Hon. Friend to order, when nothing occurred to excuse his conduct, and that the words which he concluded his speech, were much more disorderly than those to which he had very improperly objected.

Mr Francis, looking indignantly at the Speaker, told him, that a very unwarrantable menace had been offered to a Right Hon. Member, and that he (the Speaker) had heard it.

Mr Fox having made a very pointed and severe observation on the conduct of Col. Phipps: the strangers were ordered to withdraw;—in about an hour after, the gallery was opened for the admission of strangers.

Mr Pitt at our entrance was on his legs, recapitulating many of those arguments which had been used before; and was very ably answered by Mr Fox. The House having grown clamorous in calling for the question, the amendment of Mr Fox was negatived without a division.

The question was then put on the original motion.

Ayes — 135
Noes — 66

Majority — 69

Mr Bouverie next moved, That the thanks of the House should be given to the Managers of the prosecution.

This being read, was negatived without a division. At half past One the House adjourned.

FORTIETH DAY.

TUESDAY, May 5.

THE Court were not convened this day in Westminster Hall until one o'clock; and as soon as the usual ceremonies were gone through, and the proclamations made, the Lord Chancellor desired the Managers to proceed.—Mr Burke then came forward, and, by way of introductory preface, gave the proceedings of the House of Commons relative to the petition of Mr Hastings, presented a few days back, and the resolution the House came to on Monday last thereupon; which, as it was a censure upon his conduct, he had that morning (yesterday) procured a copy, and addressing himself to their Lordships, read as follows, viz.

"That no direction or authority was given by this House to the Committee appointed to manage the impeachment against Warren Hastings, Esq; to make any charge or allegation against the said Warren Hastings, respecting the condemnation or execution of Nundocomar; and that the words spoken by the Right Honourable Edmund Burke, one of the Managers, viz. 'He (meaning Warren Hastings, Esq;) murdered that man (meaning Nundocomar) by the hands of Sir Elijah Impey,' ought not to have been spoken." He made some pertinent observations upon this resolution, and then proceeded to the charge of the presents, taking up the ground from his conclusion of Thursday last. Mr Burke spoke for upwards of three hours, producing several extracts of letters to corroborate his assertions, which were read by M. A. Taylor, another of the Managers, and at half past four o'clock he concluded with informing the Lordships, that he should, on the next day of adjournment, finish his speech on that charge, and should proceed next to produce evidence in support thereof.

The Lord President then moved to adjourn, and their Lordships went back in procession to the Upper House, which being refused, Lord Loughborough came forward and informed the House, that there was to be a trial at bar to-morrow in the Court of Common Pleas, that many witnesses were in town from Norfolk, and it would be attended with much inconvenience was it to go off till a future day; he therefore his Lordship hoped he might be enabled by having the trial of Warren Hastings, Esq; put till Thursday next. The Marquis of Stafford made the motion, and the trial was adjourned till that day, and a message sent to the Commons to acquaint them therewith.

The bill for suspending for a time to be limited the county election act, was returned from the Commons with the amendments agreed to.

Lord Rawdon presented a petition signed by several Catholic Dissenters, complaining of several unfavourable sentiments entertained by English Clergymen, and praying relief. The same was read by Clerk, and ordered to lie on the table.

The Calico printers bill, the bill relative to foreign lead, and the Renfrew road bill, were brought to the Commons, and read a first time.

The Quebec corn bill, the Perth road bill, the Forfar road bill, were read a second time, and committed to to-morrow.

L O N D O N.—MAY 6.

We are always happy to announce the Royal intelligence. No sooner was the Queen formed of Prince William's arrival, than she sent him a very warm letter of invitation to Windsor Lodge. Enemies to the Royal Family were at the same time at work to keep up their old game, dividing and governing. But upon this occasion we are much rejoiced in declaring, from the authority, that it was of no avail. Instead of Prince of Wales yielding to the wishes of Ministers as inserted in some partial papers of yesterday, it is now well ascertained, that his Royal Father's eyes begin to open, respecting the unconstitutional conduct of some of his servants, and the Royal malady. The Prince has not come to the King, nor the King to the Prince—but he is about joining issue against the enemies of the illustrious house of Hanover! Morn. Star.

Monday morning, his Royal Highness Prince William came from the Queen's Lodge, Windsor, to Carlton House, where his Highness had an interview with their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and Dukes of York and Cumberland. At noon he viewed his apartments at St James and at three o'clock his Highnesses set off, accompanied by his two royal brothers, on his return Windsor Lodge, where he dined with their Majesties and the Princesses.

Monday Prince William received the congratulations of a large party of the Nobility, on his arrival. His Royal Highness, at three o'clock, made a Maçon at the Grand Lodge in Queen's-land and afterwards dined there in company with Prince of Wales the Dukes of York and Cumberland.

Monday his Royal Highness Prince William Henry paid visits to the Dukes of Gloucester and Cumberland at their respective town residences. The Prince goes to the pavilion at Brighton stone with the Prince of Wales; afterwards to Duke of York's seat at Oatlands. Other engagements are also making.

Same day Mr Pitt paid a visit to his Highness Prince William Henry, at his apartments at St James's.

Prince William Henry does not go again for some time. The Andromeda frigate is expected to be paid off; and when his Royal Highness shall be inclined for another voyage he will be larger ship.

There is a stronger resemblance of his Majesty the person of Prince William Henry, than of other branch of the royal lineage.

Last night their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Duke of York, with the Duke of Cumberland, Mrs Fitzherbert, and a large fapped at Mr Watts's house in Threadneedle street.

A Cabinet Council will be held this day to-morrow at Windsor, when the vacancy of the Chancery will be filled up. A Commission expected previous to its final disposal.

What can be the meaning that Lord Hawke was not invited to the Windsor Gala; to the entertainment given at Windsor; nor at the Council held at the Duke of Leeds's Office on Friday at which all the other Ministers were present?

The French Ambassador on Monday gave a fete at his house in Portman-square, to many English and Foreign nobility. The Prince of Wales, Duke of York, and Prince William were present.

Mr Fox gained several thousands last week at Newmarket.

Monday Mr Serjeant Watson, accompanied by Messrs Dobson, Jeffries, and Shores (being a motion from the Committee for conducting the election to be made to Parliament for repealing clauses in the Test and Corporation acts as the rights of Protestant Dissenters) had a long conference with the Minister, and next subject, house in Downing-street. The discussion of the presents, taking up the ground from his conclusion of Thursday last. Mr Burke spoke for upwards of three hours, producing several extracts of letters to corroborate his assertions, which were read by M. A. Taylor, another of the Managers, and at half past four o'clock he concluded with informing the Lordships, that he should, on the next day of adjournment, finish his speech on that charge, and should proceed next to produce evidence in support thereof.

The Lands of Longbirgham, which some time belonged to the Earl of Home, with the Teinds and Pernients. The free yearly rent of these lands is proven to be 133 l. 5 s. 3-12ths of a penny. And being valued at 25 years purchase, the upset price of lot second is 3331 l. 5 s. 6 d. 3 12ths. The lands in this lot are also held of the Crown. The precise amount of the feu duty payable for the lands in this lot cannot be precisely ascertained, as, by the charters thereof, there is a cumulo feu duty of 4 l. 0 s. 10 d. Sterling payable yearly for the lands of Longbirgham, the lands of Fairnyrie, Whiterigg, and Fithings; but for the purchasers security, the aforesaid whole feu duty of 4 l. 0 s. 10 d. is deducted from the gross rent of this lot.
The lands in both these lots are contiguous, are of a rich soil, wholly arable, and situated upon the banks of the Tweed, about four miles below Kelso, and the like distance above Coldstream, both of which are good market towns. They are not far removed from coal and lime, and command a delightful and extensive prospect of the river and adjacent country, which is rich and plentiful. The lands are capable of very considerable improvement, and are all out of lease.
